Writing anthropology by Helena Wulff

"As a discipline, anthropology builds on academic writing. Yet a focus on the craft of writing is relatively recent in the discipline's history" Helena Wulff's latest publication Writing anthropology discusses how anthropological writing styles have evolved over time and now include writing in a literary mode and in different genres ranging from creative nonfiction to memoirs, journalism and travel writing. Writing in such non-academic genres can be a way to make anthropological approaches and findings more widely known, and can inspire academic writing to become more accessible.

New Anthropological Perspectives on the Global Shipping Industry

Container economies: Logistics and labor along the maritime supply chain, published open access in the journal Focaal places the maritime shipping industry at the centre of global capitalism.

This theme section, edited by Hege Høyer Leivestad (with Johanna Markkula, University of Oslo), proposes a new anthropology of global cargo circulation.
