Facilitators to the Geoscience and Society Summit March 18-21

Would you like to participate as a facilitator and get a complimentary registration at the Geoscience and Society Summit? The summit aims to create a highly interactive forum for effective cooperation between scientists and users of scientific information to tackle global and local challenges around sustainability of natural resources and systems, global health and resilience.

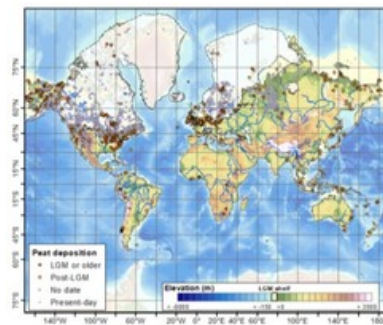

Facilitators need to have some experience leading open discussions and direct up to 20-30 people, making sure that as many voices as possible are heard within a relatively limited timeframe, and that the desired goals of the discussion are met (in terms of questions asked and conclusions reached, for which there will be guidelines).

Interested? Please contact bolin@su.se.

Time and place: March 18-21, Geoscience building, Stockholm University

Ancient wetlands provide new insight into global carbon cycle

Scientists have unearthed and pieced together evidence on more than 1,000 ancient wetland sites from across the globe, that are presently covered by fields, forests and lakes. Although vanished from the Earth's surface, these buried sites could explain some of the differences between global carbon cycle models and real-life observations. Contact Britta Sannel, Bolin Centre scientist and Senior Lecturer at Department of Physical Geography for more info.

Ten reasons for preserving grasslands

It is well known that natural and semi-natural grasslands are important for biodiversity. But such grasslands also provide us with many other benefits. Grasslands are important for the climate, for agriculture, for water in the landscape, and have large cultural values. Think about the Swedish midsummer traditions with maypoles in pastures, for example. Contact Regina Lindborg, Bolin Centre scientist and Professor of Geography, Department of Physical Geography for more info.
