RESEARCH SUMMARY

My research primarily centers on language variation and change, particularly focusing on morphosyntactic and semantic change. I approach these issues from a usage-based, cognitive, and probabilistic viewpoint. I predominantly utilize variationist and corpus linguistic methodologies to understand the emergence and diffusion of language change, as well as the cognitive foundations underlying variation and change. I mainly focus on phenomena of variation and change within different varieties of Spanish, but I also conduct research on other Romance languages and Swedish. Within these languages, my studies cover a broad spectrum, including incipient and ongoing language change, frequency effects on change, constructionalization, grammaticalization, reanalysis, analogy, actualization, linguistic efficiency, redundancy, pragmaticalization, accessibility, subjectification and intersubjectification, along with cognitive pragmatics. Moreover, my specific interests involve possessive pronouns, definite articles, omission, structural reduction, accessibility markers, coding length variability, subjunctive attrition, entrenchment and chunking, and the social determinants of neurocognitive routines. I find innovative data collection techniques intriguing, such as utilizing social media and crowdsourcing methods. Additionally, I am keen on employing statistical models to analyze language variation and change. Furthermore, I am interested in issues related to (Internet) research ethics and remain dedicated to the principles of Open Science.

EDUCATION

2019–2022

PhD in Romance languages, specialization in Spanish
(Department of Romance Studies and Classics, Stockholm University)

Thesis title: Las construcciones adverbiales del tipo "delante mío" y sus condicionantes: Patrones probabilísticos, reflejos de gramaticalización y encadenamiento analógico en variedades diacrónicas y diatópicas del español. [Adverbial constructions such as "delante mío" and their constraints: Probabilistic patterns, reflexes of grammaticalization and analogical chaining in diachronic and diatopic varieties of Spanish.]

2016–2017

Master of Arts in Romance languages, Stockholm University

2013–2016

Bachelor of Arts in Romance languages, Stockholm University

ACADEMIC EMPLOYMENT

July 2022 – June 2025

Postdoctoral researcher

Stockholm University (Department of Linguistics)

Project title: “Pathways of development around the Spanish-speaking world: Cross-varietal diachronic variation and change in 19th-21st century Spanish morpho-syntax”. Funded by the Swedish Research Council (record number 2022-00303).

March 2024 – June 2024

Senior lecturer (temporary position)

Stockholm University (Department of Romance Studies and Classics)

January 2019 – January 2022

Doctoral researcher

Stockholm University (Department of Romance Studies and Classics)

September 2017 – December 2018

Doctoral researcher in linguistics

Ghent University (Department of Linguistics)

PhD student within the project “Encima de mí or encima mío? On the Grammatical Variation in Spatial Adverbial Expressions in Peninsular Spanish” (BOF, Gent University, PI: Miriam Bouzouita). Funding for 23 months.

RESEARCH STAYS

September 2022 – August 2024

Visiting postdoctoral researcher

Humboldt-Universität zu Berlin, Institut für Romanistik.

September 2019

Visiting scholar

KU Leuven, research unit Quantitative Lexicology and Variational Linguistics (QLVL). Academic host: Professor Benedikt Szmrecsanyi.
